

Kara Warburton has been the head of terminology in IBM for nearly ten years, where she leads terminology management strategy and tools development, including a multilingual terminology database. She also leads a group of terminology industry representatives in the Localization Industry Standards Association, and she is the head of the Canadian delegation to ISO TC37, SC3, which develops terminology standards. She has a master's degree in terminology from Université Laval, and has lectured on terminology at various universities and conferences.